ANOTHER BULL
With all of my pertinacity, sagacity and rampacity, I WILL venture too far occasionally, and get scooped and scraped. No matter where I am, the Devil accompanies, and through me, plays bad pranks. There were 10 of us boys boarding with a dyspeptic old landlady, whose idea of "stomachic pressure" favored liquids, as a health and economic measure, and soups, broths, gravies, and mush, with occasional stews, constituted the menu. A new Waitress appearing, seemingly pert and chippy, immediately appealed to my sense of frolic, and I coached all the boys as to their dinner demands, adding, "now be polite and very expressive." The bell clanged: We piled in. Broth was served, then—"What will you have?" "A beef a la mode, please!" "Certainly," she responded, curtly bending a knee—"and you, please?" "Escalloped hofa gelatin!"—"At your service; and you please?"—"Gravayard stew, with gangrene border!" "sure!" she pleasantly answered! "And you?" "Oh a little Liver, minus complaint!"—"The next ordered Scarivated stag flank," and down the line, it was, "Stripped Spleen!"—"Pressed steer's lights!"—"Texas porterhouse, close to horns!"—"Kidneys, with Brights disease barred!"—"Disarmed fly protector wiggling!"—"Quivered tongue maniced!"—"Throbbing heart, unloved!"—"Marrowbone on hock!"—to each and every order of which she responded as pleasantly, and meekly as tho' devoid of any suspect of being gayed or pranked, then tripping into the kitchen she shortly appeared loaded to the guards, each plate bearing a tiny portion of scrambled hash, spread daintily over which was a fresh piece called "forget me not" accompanied by a tiny blue bell, named the "Deadly night shade!"—"You should have seen the expressions of ten mugs, particularly Ford's!—She, all smiles, stood as tho' poised for combat, while we, in nervousness and abashment, twisted and peered every direction, save at her. "Gentlemen, she murmured, I must thank each of you for your kind consideration and knightly demeanor: I am a poor waitress who in your estimation, being devoid of brains, is a plaything for facetious hilarity: To express my opinion of you all,—(but Mr. Ford particularly), would painfully distress your coarse sensibilities, so in leaving, I have presented a token of remembrance; the "Night shade" a deadly poison, symbolical of my nature, and the "Forget-me-not," for your refreshment of my memory!—Tal Tal!" said she, as kissing both hands she faded from our gaze:—There wasn't much hash consumed that day, but a cheaper, sillier, abashed crowd, you never set eyes on.
